Title of the research topic	Dynamics of Sino-Indian Relations: A Study on the Politico-Military Engagements.
Abstract of the research work	India and China, the two Asian giants, account for 35 per cent of total world population and 15 per cent of total geographical area of the world. For more than two thousand years, they had cultural, commercial and ideological links. In the present scenario China and India are the emerging powers of the world and they can make 21st Century as “Asian Century”. They are geographically separated by the highest mountain range of the world, the Himalayas. Despite this significant barrier, these two nations have sown seeds of deep mistrust in their bilateral relations. A study of relations between India and China is important at this juncture in history, as both states have gained considerable strategic importance, not only regionally, but also globally. Any relationship adopted by these two countries influences regional and global peace and stability. Both countries are declared nuclear powers and possess booming economies. Although both the countries have been positive about each other in the international media, they view each other within a complex adversarial framework. After a brief overview of the India-China relations, the research work examines the basis for China-India cooperation and analyses the frictions that exist between the two countries and the assessment will be most helpful in understanding the rationales, dynamics, constraints, challenges, and future trajectory of India-China politico-military engagement.
Progress of the research work	Now I am started to write second chapter and collecting data related my topic.
