Title of the Research Topic	Hindu Marriage at Cross Road: Interrogating the Role of Society and State
Abstract of the Research Work	Hindu marriage is aimed at family construction, and it was the base in Hinduism for the harmonious relation between family, society and state. Such instances have raised various security issues within family in Hindu societies. Marriage is an important social institution in India. The Hindu concept of marriage is that it is issanskara (tradition) and a religious sacrament. In today's context marriage has become more political i.e. individual consent than a social institution. When marriage gets into crises, it is the state which comes to protect the rights of the individual and as the mediator, it tries to reconcile with both the parties of conflict with an intention to making the marriage survive. Hence marriage is not only related with the society but also directly related with state. When marriage gets into crises along with it, the state makes laws to solve the conflict in marriage related issues. The nature, purpose, and legal constitutional status of marriage has emerged as a critical issue, the resolution of which will shape the future of our society and neither should our laws. The study is important as in the present society we see lots of differences and cases with respect to marriage. The current legal aspects on marriage strengthen or weakened the relationship between state and society. The study will also comprise the Relation between State, society, constitution and individual. The study will also be done on marriage in pre-modern, modern and post modern society and how marriage changes from social institution to individual choices.
