Title of the Research	“Emerging New International Political Order: A Study of Changing Dynamics of US-China Relations and its Impact on International Politics”
Abstract of the Research Work	The end of the Cold War in the 1990s had various impacts on international relations ¹ . The Soviet Union’s collapse in the early 1990s transformed the global political system from bipolarity to unipolarity. Now the world has changed due to the COVID-19 global crisis and the USA appears to have lost its leadership position. It failed to handle the crisis properly even within its political boundaries, under the leadership of Trump. The USA is not in a position to fulfil the global commitment and withdraw from hotbeds of internationally important political battlegrounds like Afghanistan, Iraq and Syria. Multi-polarity is gaining traction because of the Globalization process. In the process of globalization economic growth, liberals, and markets, the US military is not alone in determining world politics. A new form of global economic system emerged. Though the USA is unquestionably a key economic power in the current global economy, there are some concerns. In the international arena, other countries have also appeared to be great economic powerhouses like the USA In such a case, situation Some international relations scholars have opined that contemporary international politics is multipolar, not unipolar. the current world is simply It is multi-polar, In the multipolar world, there are a number of states like China, Japan, Canada, Australia, the European Union, and India

Progress of the Research Work	I have completed the Introduction Chapter. Now I am working on the Second Chapter.
